Bureau, which represents more than 300 family farms, voted unanimously in support of Greenidge. The Finger Lakes Economic Development Center, the area's sole economic development agency, has also regularly spoken out in support of Greenidge

Mike Davis, Business Manager International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 840:

"It is a sad day in New York State when we can throw away paying jobs in a tech field. This decision satisfies a small fraction of people whose beliefs are based on fears and who and grow careers right here. That's why we are extremely disappointed in this decision and hope to see Greenidge continue to operate."

Steve Griffin, CEO, Finger Lakes Economic Development Center:

"Our community has benefited enormously from Greenidge. I'm extremely disappointed in this decision. Not only has Greenidge hired locally, including recent local high school graduates, but they've created more jobs in tech than anyone in the area, and more than
